PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

THIS edition of Dr. Smith's "Smaller Latin-English Dictionary," while carefully preserving those distinctive features which have secured for it so wide an acceptance, is to a great extent a new and original Work.

In its previous form, the Smaller Dictionary was simply an abridgment of the larger Work. In the preparation of the new edition, every article has been carefully revised, with the express object of meeting the requirements of younger students. A comparison of the two editions will show that this aim has been steadily kept in view. The improvements introduced will be found to fall mainly under the following heads:—

1. A much larger number of the examples given are actually translated—not in every case in full, but so far as the particular point in question is concerned. Experienced teachers have found that a mere collection of Latin examples, however appositely chosen, is useless to young students; whereas a judicious interspersion of translation encourages them to make a more adequate use of the Dictionary, and to pay attention to the different applications of words. In this way too, the Dictionary becomes a school of translation, the student being not unfrequently supplied with equivalent English words or phrases, fitting closer both to the form and the spirit of the Latin than any that might have occurred to himself. In order to develop this feature of the Work without seriously adding to its bulk, very many of the citations have been curtailed, and others which seemed superfluous have been omitted. The shorter the citation—provided it be intelligible—the more readily is its immediate bearing apprehended.

2. Many articles have been re-cast, and not a few entirely re-written; partly with the object of securing more perfect accuracy in the explanations of words, and partly in order to present a simpler and clearer view of the development of their different senses. Among many such instances may be mentioned, accrualis, acervus, acies, aduro, auctoritas, cervix, clepsydra, consultus, emolumentum, emunctus, ferox, ferocia, ferocitas, gena, homullus, homuncio, instrumentum, insomnium, malitia, nam, nere, oppido, perstringo, prosa, provisio, remissio, respectus, refert, salutatio, sui, sum, ut, veritas.

In several of these, it is hoped, some positive contribution has been made towards a more perfect elucidation of the meaning and uses of words than was to be found in any previously existing Latin-English Dictionary.

3. All the etymological articles have been revised, and the greater part of them re-written, by J. K. Ingram, LL.D., Fellow and Librarian of Trinity College, Dublin; who has also contributed important corrections to the other parts of the work.

Only such etymological matter has been given as junior students could be expected really to understand and appropriate; much that would be desirable, or even necessary, in a work intended for more mature students, has therefore been omitted. The great object kept in view has been to train young minds to recognize the reign of law in Etymology: opinions will always differ as to the derivations of particular words; but it is most important to accustom the student to a strict observance of the established principles of letter-changes. It is believed that the Dictionary, in its present form, will be found, with respect to this species of scientific correctness, to bear a favourable comparison with any previous work of the same kind.

When the derivation of a word is such as to be seen at a glance, the etymology is given at the beginning of the article thus—effusus, a, um, Part. [effundo]. Where a fuller treatment is necessary, the convenience of the student has been usually consulted by placing the etymological observations at the end of the article.

The derivations of words in the Romance languages from the Latin have been noted, as in former editions, the habit of considering these derivations being found to have a marked effect in cultivating an 'etymological sense' in young students. Many corrections have been made in this part of the work, and the number of such derivations has been considerably increased.

4. Very great care has been taken to ensure accuracy in the quantities. It is scarcely to be hoped that all errors have been excluded, and should any be discovered by students and others making use of the book, the editors would thankfully receive information of such. Considerable difficulty is often caused by the position of vowels naturally short before such combinations as cr, pr, tr, &c. In such cases the vowel will be found to be for the most part marked doubtful, on the ground of analogy; even though an example of each quantity may not in every case be found. In some cases such a consensus exists for one particular quantity, that it has seemed best to give that only. Final syllables have been left for the most part unmarked—as being determinable by the ordinary grammatical rules—unless something seemed to render a definition of quantity specially desirable.

Syllables other than final left un-marked (excepting such as are determined by position) must be regarded as of unknown quantity. In this category are many Proper Names; neither having found their way into verse nor having their quantities determined by their orthography in a Greek form.

5. All modes of spelling Latin words which have been decisively shewn to be erroneous have been rejected. Thus we write caelum, not coelum; condicio, not conditio; tribunicius, adventicius, not tribunitius, &c. On the other hand, the traditional orthography has been preserved in various cases in which, while inferior in strict accuracy, it has yet a solid basis of authority. Thus it has not been thought desirable—especially in a work intended for younger students—to abandon the recently accepted spelling of arena, connitor, conjiçio, humerus, humidus, and some other words.

6. Short notes on synonymous words have been introduced in a large number of cases—rather with the view of defining more exactly the meaning of the word which is immediately dealt with, than of presenting anything like a complete view of this subject—which indeed would demand a volume in itself.

7. The Index of Proper Names has been largely increased; and the information given has been in many cases supplemented. See for example Ancyra, Anicius, Archias, Avernus, Artaxerxes, Asinius (Pollio), Cacæ, Callisthenes, Hercules, Iguvium, Ocbalus, Titan, &c. In many recent Latin Dictionaries the Proper Names are incorporated in the body of the work; but this arrangement not only sacrifices the obvious advantage of classification—there being few cases in which any doubt can arise whether a given word is a Proper Name or not—but, by increasing the number of separate headings to be glanced through before the word which the student seeks is reached, adds considerably to the mechanical labour of using the book. For example, in the letter A in this Dictionary there are nearly 2000 separate headings in the first part, and nearly 1000 Proper Names, including the derivative adjectives. By the plan here followed, the number of entries to be traversed in looking out a word is greatly reduced in Part I.; while in the case of Proper Names the advantage is proportionately very much greater. Words which have passed from their original use as Proper Names to that of Common Names or Appellatives are included in Part I.

ABBREVIATIONS OF THE NAMES OF AUTHORS.

Of the two following lists, No. I. comprises the Authors whose language this Dictionary is mainly intended to explain. No. II. contains the names of Authors rarely read by young students, but whose works contain many words which are necessary to be known, in order adequately to explain the meaning of words used by Authors comprised in the first list.

A, a, indecl. f. (sc. litera), oftener n. The primitive Indo-European ā is in Latin, as in Greek, represented by ā, ē, or ō (ā, e, o), and ā by ā, ē, or ō (ā, η, ω). A has in a good many instances been retained in Latin where e has been substituted in Greek: thus mag-nus corresponds to μέγας, maneo to μένω, anguis to ἔχιδνα. So also a appears in Latin in some cases where o is found in Greek, as in laro beside λαρόν (= λόφος), da-re beside δο-δ-ναι, asinus beside ὄνος (= ὄσος). Sometimes, however, on the other hand, we have e or o in Latin for original a, where the latter is retained in Greek; cf. mol-lis with μαλακός, lev-is (= leg-uis) with ἑλαχ-ύς. II. In Latin compounds a long by nature generally remains unchanged, as in de-labor, e-mano. A short by nature, followed by a labial or l, is sometimes changed to u, as in occupo (cupio), insulto (salto); sometimes to i, as in corripio (rapio), prohibeo (habeo), dissilio (silio). Before other consonants it generally becomes i, as in reticeo (taceo), profiteor (fateor), recino (cano). If it is followed by two consonants, as well as preceded by one, it regularly becomes e, as in ascendo (scando), condemno (damno), perfectus (factus); in-fringo (frango), and contingo (tango) are not real exceptions, for in these words the n is not radical; it only nasalizes the present-stems formed from the roots frag and tag. III. Latin a, whether long or short by nature, is for the most part, represented in French, in an accented syllable, either by e, as cāput (chef), māre (mer), pāter (père), nāsus (nez), amārus (amer), cārus (cher), amāre (aimer), amātus (aimé), mortālis (mortel), or by ai—and this chiefly, though not exclusively, before m, n or a guttural, as ōmo (aime), fāmes (faim), mānus (main), sānus (sain), mācer (maigre), ācer (aigre), āla (aile), clārus (clair). Sometimes it is not changed, as quāre (car), avārus (avare). A in position mostly remains unchanged, as arbor (arbre), carrus (char), carmen (charme), flamma (flamme); before ct it regularly becomes ai, as factus (fait), tractus (trait). Unaccented a is commonly unchanged, as salutem (salut), parare (parer), saponem (savon); it sometimes becomes e, as caballus (cheval).

IV. As an abbreviation A=Aulus; on voting tablets A (i.e. Antiquo) denoted the rejection of a proposed law; in judicial trials A=Absolvo, therefore called by Cicero litera salutaris. In dates A.D.=ante diem; A.U.C.=anno urbis conditae.

āb, ā, or abs, prep. with abl. A is used instead of ab before most consonants; but before h as well as before vowels ab is always used. Abs occurs chiefly in compds.; in Cicero's orations abs is found, but only before te. In composition, ab remains unchanged before vowels. Before m and v, it becomes ā, a-moveo, a-vertō. In the perfect tenses of sum, both ab and a are found; ab-fuit, a-fuit. Before fero and fugio, ab becomes au, au-fero, au-fugio. Before p, c, q, t, abs, or the shortened form as, is used, as abs-condo, abs-tineo, as-porto.

Ab denotes, 1. The point of departure, the source and origin: 2. Separation or distance. S. Proximity.

A. OF SPACE. I. Implying motion from a place: me a portu praemisit, he sent me on before from the harbour, Pl. Hence with verbs of separation or removal, as abducere, mittere, discedere, etc.: paululum a sole, [to stand] a little out of the sun, Cic.: ab imis unguibus usque ad verticem summum, from his toe nails even to his very crown, id. II. Without the idea of motion, to designate distance, or separation, with the verbs distare, abesse, and with the particles procul, longe, etc.: non amplius pedum millibus duobus ab castris, Caes. Also, without those verbs, to denote the measure of the distance: a millibus passuum quindecim, at a distance of 15 miles, id. III. Implying proximity; on the side of, at, on, etc., ab decumana porta, at the main entrance, id. So, a tergo, a latere, a fronte, ab occasu, ab oriente; esp. in geog. descriptions: Gallia ab Sequanis et Helvetiis adtingit Rhenum, on the side of the S. and H., id.: comp. C. I. 5.

B. OF TIME, analogous to the relations of space. I. after, directly after: ab re divina, after the sacrifice, Pl.: a mane ad noctem usque, from morning to night, id.: ab sole orto in multum diei, from sun-rise till late in the day, Liv. II. To designate the distance of one point of time from another: from, since, after: centesima lux ab interitu Clodii, since the death of Clodius, Cic.: ab urbe condita, since the foundation of Rome: a puero, from a child (childhood), Cic.

C. OTHER RELATIONS, figuratively.

I. Denoting origin, agency, cause, etc.

1. To denote the agent after a Passive Verb, or the cause after an Intrans. ād, prep. with Acc.; for euphony sometimes written at; anciently ar: e. g. arveho, arbiter, arcesso (q. v.) So: ar me advenias, Pl.: and in Inscr. ar-fuerunt, arfuisse. As opp. to ab, ad denotes, first, direction towards an object either without or with motion; then the reaching of or attaining to it; and, finally, the being at or near it.

A. In space: I. Direction towards with or without motion: to, towards: often of geog. position: Gallia vergit ad septemtriones, lies towards the North, Caes.: with the idea of arrival: to, even to, with or without usque: usque ad castra hostium accessit, Caes.: quum sudor ad imos manaret talos, Hor. Fig.: deverbere usque ad necem, to flog to death, Ter. Without usque: virgis ad necem caedi, Cic.

Ad me, te, etc. = domum meam, tuam, etc., to my, thy, house: te oro, ut ad me Vibonem statim venias, come to see me at V., Cic. Ad, with the name of a deity in the Gen., is elliptical for ad templum or aedem: ad Opis, to the temple of Ops, Cic.: ad Vestae, Hor.

With names of towns, ad is used with verbs of motion, instead of the simple Acc., when the direction or vicinity of the town is meant: profectus sum ad Capuam, to the neighbourhood of, Cic.

Ad is always used when the name is joined with another subst.: ad Cirtam oppidum iter constituunt, Sall. Both constr. are used by the poets: ad doctas proficisci cogor Athenas, Prop.: doctas jam nunc eat, inquit, Athenas, Ov.

II. Proximity: near to, by, at, among = apud: quasi flagitator astat usque ad ostium, stands like a dun continually at the door, Pl.: ad forum esse, to be at the market, id.: especially with the word pugna: pugna ad Trebiam, ad Trasimenum, ad Caunas, etc., the battle fought near the Trebia, etc.

Hence, ad laevam or sinistram (sc. manum, partem), adverb., on the left hand, on the left, Ter.: cum plebes ad tertium milliarium consedisset, near the third milestone, Cic. Ad urbem esse, was said of generals who remained outside the gates of Rome until permission was given for a triumph; and also of those appointed to military or provincial commands, just previously to their setting out to enter upon their duties, Cic. 2. Of persons: among, before (= apud): ad judices sic agi solet, id. Frequently with proper names of places: ad Velos terror multiplex erat, in and about Veii, Liv.

B. In time: direction towards, i.e. approach to a definite point of time: about, towards, up to: domum redactus ad vesperum, towards evening, Cic.: Sophocles ad summam senectutem tragoedias fecit, up to extreme old-age, Cic.: ab hora fere quarta usque ad solis occasum, Caes. II. A point of time either past or future: at, on, in, by: ad horam destinatum, at the appointed hour, Cic.: pecuniam ad diem solvere, at the appointed time (or, punctually by the day), Cic.: Caes.

C. The relations of number.

I. An approximation to a certain sum: near, almost, about: ad quadraginta eam posse emi minas, about 40 minas, Pl.: also sometimes with quasi: quasi ad quadraginta minas, near about, id.: sane frequentes fulminis omnino ad ducentos, as many as 200 in all, Cic.—N.B. In this sense, ad is often adverbial, occisus ad hominum millibus quatuor, about 4000 being slain, Caes.: so, ad viginti matronis occisus, Liv.

II. The terminus, the limit: to, even to (rare): ad assem, to the last farthing, Hor.: ad unum omnes, or simply ad unum, all without exception: omnes ad unum idem sentiunt, all to a man, Cic.: Caes. III. An addition: over and above: ad Faleriorum Pyrrhivae proditorum, tertium transfugis documentum esset, a third example to deserters, in addition to the traitors of Falerii and of Pyrrhus, Liv.

D. In various relations.

I. With verbs of giving, sending, submitting, etc., ad with Acc. is used in a sense different from that of the Dat. in connection with the same verbs: litteras dare ad aliquem=to send or dispatch a letter to anyone; but litteras dare alicui=to give a letter into his own hands: ad me ex Aegypto litteras misit, he wrote to me from Egypt, Cic. Hence mittere or scribere librum ad aliquem, to dedicate a book to one: quae institueram, ad te mittam, id. So in titles of books, poems, etc.: M. Tulli Ciceronis ad Marcum Brutum Orator, dedicated to, addressed to, etc. II. With regard to, in respect of, as to:

1. With verbs: ad omnia alia aetate sapimus rectius, in respect to all other things, Ter. 2. With adjectives: for, for the purpose of: locus ad egrediendum idoneus, suitable for landing, Caes. 3. With substantives: mentis ad omnia caecitas, blindness with regard to everything, Cic. Applied to persons, ad sometimes=adversus, against: ad quemvis numerum equitum adire audent, to advance against, Caes. III. The standard or rule to which anything is referred: agreeably to, according to, after: ad istorum normam sapientes, Cic.: ad praescriptum agere, to act in accordance with orders, Caes.: ad urbium speciem, after the fashion of cities, Suet. IV. To denote, 1. an aim or purpose: to, for: haec juventutem ad facinora incendebant, excited to crime, Sall.: this use of ad is very common with the gerund: alere canes ad venandum, Ter. Hence, instead of an adj., to designate a profession: miles ad naves, a marine, Liv.: servi ad remum=remiges, oarsmen, id.: ad lecticam homines, litter-bearers, Cat.

(b) of time: at last, Cic. Hence (γ) of order: finally, lastly=denique, id. (δ) of degree: to the last degree, wholly, quite=omnino (not ad postremum in this sense): Liv.

XI. Ad unguem, lit. to the nail; hence, exactly, accurately: ad unguem factus homo, a polished man, Hor. (see unguis).

F. Ad is sometimes placed after its substantive: senatus, quos ad soleret, referendum censuit, Cic.

G. In comp. I. Form: According to the usual orthography, the d of ad remains unchanged before vowels, and before b, d, h, m, v: adhibeo, adduco, adhibeo, admoveo, advenio; it is assimilated to c, f, g, l, n, p, r, s, t: accipio, affigo, aggero, allabor, annunero, appello, arripio, assumo, attineo; before g and s it sometimes disappears: agnosco, aspicio, asto; and before qu it passes into c: acquirō, acquiesco.

verbs denotes: 1. motion to: accedere, to approach; adire, to go to. 2. addition: addiscere, to learn (something) more; addocere, to teach more.

at or ast, conj. (the latter, q. v., is used by the poets, and by Cicero in his letters. For the sake of euphony sometimes written ad). At denotes transition of thought, and in most cases adds something, the effect of which is to diminish or destroy the force of what has been admitted: sed is a word of opposition, at a word of addition: at is always at the beginning of a sentence or clause. I. Mere transition (freq. with a limiting meaning): but, yet: cominus gladiis pugnatum est: at Germani, celeriter phalange facta, impetus gladiatorum exceperunt, Caes. Hence at frequently occurs at the beginning of the subdivisions of works, as the books of the Aeneid, Ovid's Metamorphoses, etc., in which cases it serves to indicate a close connection, yet by way of contrast, between the end of the preceding division and the beginning of the new one, e. g.: talibus exemplis monitae nova sacra frequentant, turaque dant, sanctasque colunt Ismenides aras (last two lines of Ov. M. 3): at non Alcithoë Minyias orgia censet accipienda deli (commencement of next book). 2.

sudden transition to a new circumstance or idea; esp. in emphatic or impassioned style: consurgit Turnus in eum et ferit. . . At perfidus ensis frangitur in medio, but, lo! Virg. Hence in appeals and exclamations: at tu nauta, vagae ne parce malignus arenae ossibus et capiti inhumato particulam dare, but do not, I pray, Hor. And in ironical expressions: at credo mea numina tandem fessa jacent, but, no doubt! Virg. Sometimes at is found at the very commencement of a vehement speech: as, at o Deorum quicquid . . . where it implies a sudden outburst of passion: O but, all ye gods. . . ! Hor. II. In adding something opposed to what has been previously mentioned: but, but then, but on the other hand: nefarius Iliupias Pisistrati filius arma contra patriam ferens: at Sulla, at Marius, at Cinna recte, immo jure fortasse, but, on the other hand, Cic.: Cingetorix, simul atque de Caesaris adventu cognitum est, ad eum venit. At Indutimarus bellum parare instituit, on the contrary, Caes. Strengthened with pol, edepol, hercle, etc. Ha. Gaudio ero vobis. Ad. At edepol nos voluptati tibi, nay, on the contrary, faith, Pl. With contra, e contrario, potius, etiam, vero, etc.: (Cornutus) taedio curarum mortem in se festinavit: at contra reus nihil infracto animo, quater vincula, Tac.: at etiam sunt, Quirites, qui dicant, a me in exilium ejectum esse Catilinam, but, there are actually people who say, Cic.

2. In anticipating an objection at may be translated, but it may be said, but it may be objected: at memoria minuitur, but (it will be said) the memory fails, Cic.: and in introducing the answer to an objection, by why: quid porro quaerendum est? Factumne sit? At constat, why, that is agreed on all hands, id. 3. With enim, to state a reason for an objection: but certainly, but indeed, etc. at enim nimis hic longo sermone utimur; diem conficimus, but really, Pl. After a condition or concession expressed by si, etiamsi, etsi, etc.: yet, still, at least: liceat haec nobis, si oblivisci non possumus, at tacere, id.

5. Sometimes in sudden transitions=immo vero, sed...: non est, inquit, in parietibus res publica. At in aris et focis, yes, but it is, etc., Cic. ātāt or attat, also several times repeated atatatae, attatatatae, or atatte, atattate, etc., interj. An exclamation of joy, pain, wonder, fright, warning, etc.: oh! ah! alas! lo! strange! etc.: Pl.: Ter.

atque or ac (the latter in class. prose usu. only before consonants), conj. [from adque, which form sometimes occurs in MSS. and inscriptions]: a copulative particle, denoting a closer connection than is implied by et: and also, and besides, and even, and.

A. Used in joining single words: esp. where these express ideas closely related to each other: ex animo ac vere dicere, sincerely and truly, Ter.: copia sententiarum atque verborum, store of thought and language, Cic. Often the ideas are related by contrast: omnia honesta atque inhonesta; divina atque humana, Sall. auspicium, ii, n. [auspex]. Lit.: a bird-seeing, a bird-watching: divination from birds, auspices: Cic.: Liv. The auspices were divided into maxima or majora, and minora: the former were possessed by dictators, consuls, censors, and praetors: the latter by curule aediles and quaestors. Magistrates, on their entrance upon office, received the auspices: while their office lasted, they were said, habere auspicia (Cic.: Liv.), i.e. to have the right of taking the auspices; and at the expiration of their office, they laid them down. (v. Smith's Ant. s. v.) In war the commander-in-chief alone had the right of taking the auspices: ductu auspicioque allicijus res gerere, Liv. Hence, meton. for the chief command: tuis auspiciis totum confecta duella per orbem, under your command, or auspices, Hor. And in gen. right, power, will: meis auspiciis, according to my own pleasure, Virg.

ausus, a, um, Part. [audeo]. aut, conj. or: introduces an alternative regarded objectively as a fact: vel from volo, an alternative, viewed as still to be chosen, and dependent on the will; that is, considered subjectively. Hence in many cases either aut or vel may be used, according to the point of view from which the subject is regarded: e.g. satis esse causae arbitrabatur quare in Dumnorigem aut ipse animadverteret, aut civitatem animadvertere juberet, Caes.: here Caesar contemplates the alternatives as hypothetical facts. Petit ut vel ipse de eo statuatur, vel civitatem statuere jubeat, ib.: in this passage the same alternatives are stated, but from a different point of view, viz., as left to the choice of Divitiacus. Aut (often aut . . . aut, either . . . or) introduces an alternative the acceptance of which implies the rejection of the other; but whether the co-existence of the alternatives is possible or not is indicated by the context: truncis arborum aut admodum firmis ramis abscisis, trunks of trees or very stout branches, Caes.

2. To introduce a new alternative, supposing the first to fail: or else (cf. alioquin): redduc uxorem, aut quam ob rem non opus sit cedo, or else, tell me why, Ter.: Cic.: omnia bene sunt ei dicenda, qui hoc se posse profiteretur, aut eloquentiae nomen relinquendum est, or else he must give up, etc., Cic. So even in the case of two disjunctive phrases: res ipsa et reipublicae tempus aut me ipsum, quod nolum, aut alium quempiam aut invitabit aut dehortabitur, id. 3. In negative clauses, repeated: ne aut ille aliserit, aut uspiam ceciderit aut perfregerit aliquid, Ter. 4. In interrogations (quite exceptional): quaesivit num ille aut ille defensurus esset, Cic. III. In a limiting sense, to subjoin something less important: or at least: submersas obrue puppes, aut age diversas, Virg.: quaero, num injuste aut improbe fecerit, or at least wrongly, Cic. IV. Only in the poets, neque . . . aut, sometimes takes the place of neque . . . neque: neque ego hanc abscondere furto speravi, ne finge, fugam: nec conjugis unquam praetendi taedas, aut haec in foedera veni, nor have I, etc., Virg.

V. The poets connect by aut . . . vel, vel . . . aut, instead of aut . . . aut, or vel . . . vel (in prose writers the two particles are never connected): tellus aut hisce, vel . . . Ov. VI. In connection with other particles: 1. aut etiam: quid ergo aut hunc prohibet, aut etiam Xenocratem, or even X., Cic. 2. aut certe: or at least, id. 3. aut vero for connecting a more important thought: or indeed, or truly: quem tibi aut hominem, aut vero deum, auxilio futurum putas? aye, or what god? id. 4. aut ne . . . quidem: ego jam aut rem, aut ne spem quidem exspecto, either good news, or else not even the hope of it, id. (Hence Ital. o; Fr. ou.)

beginning of a clause): again, moreover: unum (iter) angustum et difficile erat: mons autem altissimus impendebat, Caes. 2. More frequently marks a more or less emphatic contrast: on the other hand, but: ipse nihil scribo; lego autem libentissime, but I do read, and with the greatest pleasure, Cic. II. When a word is repeated from a previous clause, in continuing a train of thought: now, well but, well then: nunc quod agitur, agamus: agitur autem, liberine vivamus, an mortem obeamus, id. III. In connecting a parenthetical clause: quod vitium effugere qui volet (omnes autem velle debent), etc., and surely all ought, etc., id. IV. In arguments, to indicate the steps by which the conclusion is reached: now, well but: aut hoc, aut illud: hoc autem, non igitur illud. Itemque: aut hoc, aut illud: non autem hoc: illud igitur, id. V. In putting an emphatic question: indeed, forsooth. Th. Ego non tangam meam? Ch. Tuam autem, furcifer? thine, why, how so? Ter. Esp. where a correction is made: num quis testis Postumum appellavit? testis autem? num accusator? witness did I say? Cic. VI. In the poets, sed and autem are connected in interrogations: sed quid ego haec autem nequidquam ingrata revolve? but . . . however, Virg.

B. b, indecl. n., the soft, or sonant, labial, corresponding to the hard, or surd, p, etc. The Romans probably gave the sound p in many cases where they wrote b, especially when the b was final, as in ab, ob, sub, before p or t, or when those preps. were used in comp., before the same letters, when no assimilation took place in writing. Quintilian says "quum dico obtinuit, secundum b litteram ratio poscit, aures magis audiunt p." so sometimes scribitur is found instead of scriptus. Hence we find variations between bs and ps: cf. Absyrtus and Apsyrtus, opsonium and obsonium: gen., however, the Gr. ψ was rendered by ps. II. Whether b (at least as an initial sound) existed in the original Indo-European tongue, has been disputed, in consequence of the difficulty of tracing the sound through cognate words in the several branches of that family of languages. Latin initial b corresponds in only a few words to Greek β, as in balbus (βάρβαρος), ballo (βλη-χῆ), bos (βοῦς), bilo (βαίλω, ἔ-βη-ν), and in some of these it represents Indo-European g or gv. In bibo it corresponds irregularly to π; in balaena, initial b represents φ. B in the middle of words corresponds to Indo-European bh, and therefore to Greek φ; as in albus (ἀλφός), ambo (ἄμφω), nebula (νέφος), umbilicus (ὀμφαλός); in a few instances it corresponds to dh, and so to Greek θ, as in ruber (ῥυθρός), uber (οὔθηρ). In words borrowed from the Greek, b sometimes represents π, as in buzus (βύζος), Burrus (Πύρρος), carbasus (κάπρασος). According to Grimm's law, p in Gothic should answer to Latin b; but no example of such correspondence is forthcoming. III. In bis, bellum, donus, b has arisen from an earlier Latin du. In publicus (=populicus), it has taken the place of p. Ferbut, from ferreo, was perhaps due to the wish to avoid the combination ru. In aspello, asporto (absp.), the b is omitted; in aufero, aufugio (abf.), it is changed to u.

IV. Latin b most commonly remains unchanged in French, esp. at the beginnings of words, as bonus (bon), bibere (boire); but in a good many instances turns to v, as cubare (couver), ebrius (ivre), habere (avoir), probare (prouver), subinde (souvent). So also in Italian avere, provare.

V. In Inscr., B generally denotes bonus or bene: thus B. D.=Bona Dea; B. M.=Bene Merenti.

C, o, the third letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding originally in sound to the Greek Γ. The Dullian inscription gives LECIONES for legiones; and even to the latest times C and Cn. stood for Gaius and Gnaeus. But from an early period there was a tendency to give to C the sound of K: in inscriptions Consul is represented by the abbreviation Cos. not Kos.; and K was retained as a written symbol only before a, as in KAL. for Kalendae and Calumnia. It is probable that, so long as Latin remained uncorrupted, C retained the hard sound of K, even before the vowels i and e. II. C in Latin corresponds to Skr. k, kh, k' or ç, and regularly to Gr. κ. Sometimes where π is found in Greek, Latin, following the orig. Indo-European, has c (or qu): thus coquo, πέπω; linquo, λείπω; voco, φέπος; oculus, ὄφθαλμος. In the Germanic languages it is represented by h and sometimes, in the middle of a word, by g: cf. calamus, O. H. G. halm; cor (stem. cord-), Goth. hairtō, Eng. heart; cornu, Goth. haurn, Eng. horn; socer, Goth. svathra; decem, Goth. taihun; nox (stem. noct-), Goth. naht, O. H. Omission of c: (i) Between two vowels: cf. Lat. focus, jocus, nocere, etc.: with Fr. feu, jeu, nuire, &c. (ii) followed by t: cf. Lat. dictus: Fr. dit; lectus: Fr. lit. (iii) followed by r: cf. Lat. lacrima, with Fr. larme. IV. as an abbrev. c stands for Gaius, and reversed, G, for Gaia. Upon voting tablets it meant condemno. D, d, the fourth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding, both in sound and in place, to the Greek Delta (Δ). It is the medial dental. Changes of D to other letters and v. v. 1. D to T. At the end of words t was frequently substituted for it in early times; hence some modern editors write at for ad, aput for apud, etc. T is sometimes changed to d in the derivation of words: e. g. from mentior comes mendax, from quattuor, quadraginta, etc. 2. D to B. At the beginning of some words, du followed by a vowel has been changed into b: e. g.: duellum, bellum; duis, bis; duonus, bonus. In (d)uiginti, the d has been dropped. 3. D to R: e. g.: ar for ad (v. arbler); apor for apud. 4. D to L: e. g.: dacrima, lacrima; lingua, lingua; odor (ὄζειν) oleo; so, as between Greek and Latin, δαφνίς, levir. 5. In compound words, d at the end of the first portion of the compound, is generally assimilated to the initial consonant of the second portion with which it comes in contact: e. g.: ac-cedo; af-ficio; ag-gredior; al-ludo; ap-parare; ar-rigo; as-sidere. So quip-piam for quid-piam; quic-quam for quid-quam. When in such cases, d is followed by s and another consonant, it is omitted altogether: e. g. a-scendo, a-stringo. The same thing takes place when d is followed by the nasal gn: e. g.: a-gnatus, a-gnosco. 6. In inflection, d is omitted before s, or (rarely) assimilated: e. g.: custos for custod-s; lae-si, for laed-si; but ces-si for ced-si. II. Changes of D in the Romance languages: D into Z, especially di into z: e. g.: Lat. ardens, pendulus, It. ar-zente, penzolo; Lat. medius, radius, It. mezzo, razzo. 2. Di into G or J: e. g.: Lat. hodie, It. oggi; Lat. dies, diurnus, Fr. jour. 3. D into L: e. g.: Lat. cicada, hedera, It. cicala, ellersa; Lat. cauda, Sp. cola. 4. D into R (rare): e. g.: Lat. lampas, lampadis, Sp. lampara. 5. D into N: e. g.: Lat. lampas, lampadis; It. lampana;

Lat. perdix, It. pernice. 6. Omission of D: in French, between two vowels: e. g.: Lat. audire, gladius, fides, nudus, videre, Fr. ouir, glaive, foi, nu, voir. In Italian at the end of words: e. g.: Lat. ad, apud, modo, fides, It. a, appo, mò, fè. III. In the oldest period of the Latin language, the ablat. sing. ended in d: MARID, DICTATOREN, IN ALTOD MARID, on the Col. Rostr.

2. Several prepositions and other prefixes originally ended in d, which d was afterwards usually dropped: e. g. prod in prod-ire, prod-esse; red in red-ire, red-dere; sed in sed-itio. IV. As an abbreviation, D usually stands for the praenomen Decimus; also for Deus, Divus, Dominus, Decurio, etc.; in epitaphs, D. M. = Dis Manibus.

N.B.—The use of the symbol D as the representative of 500 is a modern corruption: the original mark was the half of the original Tuscan numeral ① or ①½ = 1000, which printers have found it convenient to represent by D.

Before j it varies between the forms dis and di: disjicio, disjungo, dijudico: in the MSS. both forms of the same word are not unfrequently found. II. Dis before verbs means asunder, in pieces, apart, in two: designating the separation of a whole into parts: e. g. diffundo, diffugio, dirumpo: sometimes it denotes the separation of what has been brought into temporary connection, e. g. digredior, discedo. As an element of adjectives, dis denotes difference or negation: e. g. discors, dissonus, disimilis, difficilis. [Dis, "in-two," is connected with the second numeral: cf. the name of various magistrates at Rome and in the provinces. Perduellionis, an extraordinary criminal court (during the republic), the duumviri: Liv.: Cic. (v. Smith's Ant. s. v.).

2. Sacrorum, the keepers of the Sibylline books (superseded by the decemviri sacris faciundis): Liv. 3. Navales, extraordinary magistrates, created for the purpose of equipping fleets: id. 4. Duumviri were also appointed to build temples or dedicate them, ad aedem faciendam s. dedicandam, id.: in sing.: duumvir, id. 5. Juri dicundo, the highest magistrates in the municipia; justices: Cic.: Caes.

dux, dūcis, com. [v. duco] a conductor, guide: itinerum, Caes.: locorum, Liv. 2. in any undertaking: foll. by ad and Acc., Cic.: also Gen., regendae civitatis, id.: and absol.: Teucro dux et auspice Teucro, Hor. Fem.: Cic.: Virg. II. Esp. a military commander, general: Caes. Also a lieutenant-general, general of division; as opp. to the Imperator: Cic. Fig., of animals, etc.: dux regit examen, Hor.: gregis, i. e. aries, Ov. (Hence It. duca, doge; Fr. duc, and, from It, Eng. duke.)

dynamis, is, f. = δύναμις, store, plenty (as vis in Lat.): Pl.

dynastes, ae, m. = δυναστής, a ruler, prince: Cic.: Caes.

E, e, indecl. n. (or subaud. littera) f. the fifth letter of the Latin alphabet, the second of the vowel series, corresponding to both the e and the η of the Greeks. It ordinarily represents an Indo-European ā or a: see on letter A. I. e is substituted for a: 1. in compounds of roots which contain a long by position: e.g.: scando, descendo. It sometimes, but rarely, takes the place of d: e.g.: grādior, progrādior. In some cases double forms exist, the one with the substituted, the other with the original vowel: e.g. from spargo, we have both conspargo and conspargo.

2. In the reduplication of roots with a: e.g.: cādo, cā-cidi; tango (root tāg-), tā-tigi. 3. In the perfect of some verbs which have d in the present: e.g.: facio, fecit; facio, fecit. This is thought by some to have arisen from the contraction of reduplicated perfects, fe-faci, fe(f)ci. II. e is changed into i: 1. In a few compound verbs: e.g.: spēcio, conspēcio; primo, imprimo: but generally the e of the simple verb remains unchanged. 2. In the inflections of substantives: e.g.: nomēn, nomīnis. III. e takes the place of i.

1. In the neuter forms of adjectives in is: e.g. facilis, facile; similis, simile. 2. In the nom. and acc. sing. of a class of neut. substantives: e.g.: ovile (stem ovill-). 3. In the nom. forms aedes, canes, etc., for aedis, canis, etc. IV. e in verbal roots is sometimes changed into o in derived substantives: e.g.: tēgo, tōga; pendo, pondus. But this change, which is a regular rule of derivation in Greek, is extremely rare in Latin. The formative suffix os (orig. as) of neuter nouns (which in the nom. has become us), sinks in the oblique cases to es; as opus (opus), operis (for opes-is). E takes the place of o also in velle from volo. V. e is rarely found instead of u: thus from jūro are formed dejūro, and pejūro. VI. e is omitted in the inflections of many nouns, which in the nom. sing. end in er: e.g. matēr, matris; magistēr, magistri; pulchēr, pulchra, pulchrum.

VII. changes of E in the Romance languages. 1. e long, whether by nature or position, generally remains unchanged, as spero, Fr. espère; crudelis, Fr. cruel; ferrum, It. ferro, Fr. fer; terra, It. terra, Fr. terre, but is sometimes changed (i) into oi in French: cf. avena, credo, with Fr. avoine, crois; (ii) into i in French: cf. cera, ecclesia, temo, with Fr. cire, église, timon; (iii) into ei in French before n: cf. frenum, Fr. frein; plenus, Fr. plein; serenus, Fr. serein. 2. short e is generally changed (i) into ie: cf. fel, gelu, with It. fiele, gelo; fel, ferus, hedera, with Fr. fiel, hier, lierre. (ii) sometimes into i: cf. deus, ego, meus, with It. dio, io, mio; decem, nego, with Fr. dix, nier.

ex or ē (the latter form only before consonants and even there far less frequent than ex. But certain expressions have the same form invariably, as ex parte, ex sententia, ex tempore; and on the other hand, e regione and e republica, used adverbially), prep. with Abl. out of, from (opp. to in).

A. Of space: passim. 2. In a downward direction: from, down from, off: ex equis desillire, to dismount, Caes. 3. In an upward direction: globum terrae eminentem e mari, rising above, Cic. 4. To indicate the place where any thing is done, from, down from: ex equis colloqui, to have an interview on horseback, id.: ex equo (ex equis, of a number of persons) pugnare, to fight on horseback, id. Hence the adverbial expressions, ex adverso, ex diverso, ex contrario, e regione, ex parte, etc. (v. adversus, etc.). Also ex itinere, during or in the course of a journey or march: Cic.: Sall.

B. Of time: from and after a given point of time: from, since: bonus volo jam ex hoc die esse, from this day forward, Pl.: ex quo (sc. tempore), ever since the time when . . ., Virg.: Liv. 2. immediately after, directly after, after: Cotta ex consulatu est profectus in Galliam, on the expiry of his year of office, Cic. N.B.—Ex placed after its noun (rare): terris ex omnia surgunt, Lucr.

D. In composition ex is usually employed only before vowels and the consonants h, c, p, q, s, t; before f, the prefix becomes ef; and before the other consonants the form e is used. A few exceptions to these rules are found: e.g. epoto and epotus as well as expotus; escendo as well as exscendo; the forms ecfero, ecfari, ecfodio, are not uncommon in good MSS., and from them (not from exfero, etc.) the assimilated form proceeds. Moreover, in the compounds of roots beginning with s, the s is often elided: e.g. excidium for exscidium (from exscindo), and sometimes double forms of such compounds exist: e.g. exul, exsul, etc. But the s is more usually retained: as exsangui, etc. II. Signification: 1. Primarily and most freq. out or forth: exeo; and in an upward direction, emineo. 2. Hence, fig. to imply change, the result being indicated by the latter element, e.g. effeminare, to change a man's disposition into that of a woman. 3. In privative sense and equivalent to the English without, or the suffix less: e.g. effrenare, elinguis. 4. To denote termination, conclusion: e.g. elugeo. 5. Intensive: e.g. emiror, exalbesco, elaboro, emitor. With an adj. = superlative suffix, as edurus. (The original form of this prep. was ec, which is found in ecfero, ecfari, etc., and is identical with the Gr. ἐξ, the form ex corresponding to Gr. ἐξ: cf. ab-s, su(b)-s.)

F, f, the sixth letter of the Latin alphabet, occupies the same place as the digamma or vau in the Greek alphabet, to which it corresponds in form, though entirely different in phonetic character. Initial f in Latin takes its rise from I. E. bh or (less frequently) from dh, sometimes irregularly from I. E. gh (which is properly represented by Latin h). Hence it corresponds to Gr. φ or θ, and sometimes to Gr. χ. Thus we have Gr. φέρω beside Lat. fero; Gr. φάται, φημι, Lat. fari, fama; Gr. φεύγω, Lat. fugio; Gr. φω, Lat. ful. On the other hand we have Gr. θῆρα beside Lat. ferus; Gr. θῆρα, Lat. fores; Gr. θερμός, Lat. formus; Gr. θεω, Lat. (εὐς) fio. And again we have Gr. χαίω beside Lat. frio; Gr. χολή, Lat. fel; Gr. χάρις, Lat. (ad) fatim, fatigo. F occurs but little in the middle of Latin words, in which place b usually corresponds to φ, as in ambo (ἀμφω), nebula (νέφος); but f, from bh, is sometimes found in the other Italian dialects, v. serofa. Again, though d in the middle of Latin words is regularly found as the representative of original dh (as in aedes, αἶθω), f, from dh, appears in rufus, which has therefore been supposed to have been borrowed from a provincial Italian dialect, the true Latin being ruber, which bears to ῥυθ-πος the same relation as uber to οὐρα. Though f most commonly represents Gr. φ (when initial), it was phonetically different; that it was not, like φ, an aspirate, is sufficiently shown by its inability to assimilate a preceding nasal; thus, whilst in ἐμφαίνω the nasal is assimilated, we have in Latin not im-ficio (as we have im-petus) but in-ficio. The same thing appears from the possibility of a reduplicated f in Latin as se-felli (βέβηλο πέφυκα). Other than nasal prefixes are assimilated by f; thus affero, offero, differo, effero, for ad-fero, ob-fero, dis-fero, ec-fero. II. According to Grimm's law, Latin f, from bh, corresponds to b in Gothic, and to p (or b) in Old High German; thus, Lat. frater, Goth. brōthar, O. H. G. bruo-dar; Lat. fagus, Goth. bōka, O. H. G. puocha, Lat. forare, A.-S. (which goes with Gothic) borian, O. H. G. poran: whilst, when it arises from dh, it corresponds to Gothic d and O. H. G. t; thus, Lat. fores, Goth. daur and Eng. door, O. H. G. tor; Lat. ferus, A.-S. deor and Eng. deer, O. H. G. tior: and, when it arises from gh, to Gothic g and O. H. G. k (or g); thus Lat. fel, Eng. gall, O. H. G. gallā. III. In the Romance languages f in general remains unchanged; sometimes, however, it changes (1) (when it begins a word) to h; this occurs chiefly in Spanish, in which it is very common; thus, Lat. ferrum, Sp. hierro; Lat. filius, Sp. hijo; Lat. fabulari, Sp. hablar; Lat. facere, Sp. hacer; it also appears in Fr. hors from Lat. foris. (2) Into b: thus, Lat. flocculus, It. bioccolo; Lat. forfex, It. forbice; but this change is very rare.
